Trust, and the city is not obliged to pay the commination.

These suits are the consequence of the fight made in the City Council on the fight made in the fight made There is a Women trailer not to pay the bills until the matter had been thorougly investigated.

This put the Administration in a dilemma. It could not violate the orders of the Council, and the gas companies threatened either to cut off the supply or to refuse to continue the 21-2 per cent, of their receipts to the city, called for in their tranchise. However, the Aldermen claimed that the 31-2 per cent, was all a kinff. They claimed that instead of being paid into the general fund it was applied on the bills for gas, which were sliways enough in exceess of appropriations not only to eat up the honus, but to leave a large amount to the wrong side of the public ledger.

In substantiation of this claim a statement from the Comproller's bocks was made. It showed that in the five years, from 1839 to 1853 inclusive, the 3½ per cent, bonus anounted to but $2,484,645,39 with the bonus added. This wade an excess of 182,335,35, of which the city owed the amount of $17,000. Corporation Counsel held that the city in reality got no benefits from the 2½ per cent bonus, and the Council refused further payment of back bills in consequence.

who claim to have been swindled are turning up daily.

One of Hamel's most furlous victims is Mr. Berkowitz, of 197 Delancey street. When he was asked to cash a check of 355 by Hamel he hadn't the money and referred him to Jacob Heller, a saloon-keeper in the same building. Heller gave Hamel 35 on the check, which was ostensibly made by Louis Hallamayer, on the Eleventh Ward Bank, and since it has turned out to be frauduent Berkowitz and Heller have divided the loss.

William Klein, a liquor dealer at 112 Cathon street, is another victim. He cashed a forged check on the Union Square Bank for $25, and is wondering now how it can be that such a congenial fellow as Hamel would cheat him.

H. Weiss, a liquor dealer at 228 East Houston street, is also a loser from Hamel's disappearance, but as the latter was always a good customer he is not doing much grumbling. Many others are known to have been swirdled, but they refuse to admit that they were victims. When Hamel went away he neglected to tell his wife maything about his intentionism, but she says he rever supported her, anyway, and his absence makes no difference. She has no children and keeps herself by doing washing. Hamel was about thirty years old, was always well dressed for a painter, and his dupes think be lish't far away. They are doing a little detective work in looking for him, but have not notified the police.

sault by Policeman Ruppert.

In court to-day Mrs. Dillon said she first knew Delaney a few months ago. He represented himself as a lawyer and wanted to do business for her.

She employed film to bring suit for $2,000 damages against a railroad company for setting fire to her roof by locomotive sparks, and she signed a paper at his request. Afterwards, Mrs. Dillon says, she ascertained that she had signed a power of attorney.

McGuire alleges he was knocked to the sidewalk and partially stunned. "I felt,"

he had had no trouble with Ruppert; was committing no breach of the peace, and was unable to account for the asseult unless the policeman was irresponsible and bore ilm some fancied grudge.

Ruppert denied that he used any sort of an instrument upon McGuire, who, he said, was drunk and ugly and refused to move along when told to do so. He must have received his injuries from falling on the sidewalk.

The two men's stories were directly contradictory, and inspector McAvoy concluded to take the complaint and submit it to the Board of Police Commissioners.
